

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

REP. RICK LARSEN, AMBASSADOR DINO DJALAL, AND SENIOR HILL STAFF TO ADDRESS THE ROLE OF CONGRESS IN THE REBALANCE TOWARD ASIA

WASHINGTON, D.C. (April 16, 2013) – As the 113th Congress takes helm, responding to an increasingly dangerous North Korea, concluding Trans-Pacific Partnership agreement negotiations, managing the drawdown of troops from Afghanistan, and progressing relations with Myanmar are a few of the complex issues in Asia demanding attention. The Obama administration has placed an increased emphasis on the region in recognition of its growing global economic and strategic importance, announcing a rebalancing to Asia last year. During a time of constrained resources and competing domestic priorities, Congress will play a pivotal role in this strategy through its spending and oversight powers and ability to approve trade agreements.

With this in mind, The National Bureau of Asian Research (NBR) will host Representative Rick Larsen, Indonesia's Ambassador Dino Patti Djalal, and other senior experts on April 17 at "Engaging Asia 2013: How Will the 113th Congress Address the Rebalance toward Asia?" This half-day conference will feature discussion of congressional priorities for the U.S. rebalancing strategy. It will also include an assessment of NBR's new report by Edward Gresser (Progressive Economy) and Daniel Twining (German Marshall Fund of the United States), "Whose Pacific Century? The 113th Congress and Asia," which outlines key policy issues that the new Congress will confront in the region.
